

Georgia Left Me Out

What is Georgia's coverage gap?

Under the Affordable Care Act, every person was supposed to have a way to get health care coverage. People with low incomes would get Medicaid as long as their state leaders agreed. However, Georgia's state leaders have declined to extend health insurance to low-income Georgians. Now many Georgians are left in a coverage gap, and there is no way for them to get health insurance.

Who is in the gap?

About 290,000 hard-working Georgians fall into the coverage gap. These Georgians are veterans and their spouses, parents, young adults, and low-wage workers. They work in jobs that do not often come with health insurance like food service, construction, child care, and retail.

Who can fix the coverage gap?

Our elected officials have the power to solve this problem. The Governor and the state legislature have so far rejected billions of dollars that are set aside to provide health coverage for Georgians in the gap. But they can still bring Georgia's tax dollars back to our state so that all Georgians can put a health insurance card in their wallets and go to the doctor when needed.

How does closing the coverage gap help Georgia?

Closing the coverage gap is good for...

- Georgia's workforce

More than 50,000 new jobs will be created in industries like health care, real estate, hospitality, and transportation.

- Georgia's economy

Georgia would receive about $3 billion per year from the federal government by closing its coverage gap. That extra investment in the state would generate $1.3 billion in new economic activity in Georgia's rural communities each year.

- Georgians

Georgia has the 3rd highest uninsured rate in the U.S. Closing the coverage gap will help cover more than 400,000 Georgians. These Georgians will be able to get preventive health care (like cancer screenings) to stay healthy, see a doctor when they get sick, and have protection from high medical bills.

Can Georgia afford to close its coverage gap?

- The Georgia gives up $3 Billion for every year that our leaders ignore the coverage gap. These dollars are supposed to help Georgians access health care services but instead they go unused.
- The federal government covers 90% of the costs of Medicaid expansion. Georgia is only responsible for 10% of costs.
- Under a new federal law, Georgia could earn $1 Billion in additional federal funding if our leaders close the coverage gap. Those dollars could help pay for other needs in our state like workforce training programs or increased school funding for kids.
